Deep in the heart of Texas, amid the prickly bluebonnets of west Texas, sits the cozy city of Amarillo. While Amarillo is hardly a secret among the bigger cities in Texas, it's the little things that make Amarillo so charming. Amarillo is a little town with a big heart. Despite the geographical position in the heart of Texas, Amarillo is also a small city compared to the other major urban areas in the state. The city's nickname of "The Big or Little City" – the city of around 910,000 people – is accurate. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, Amarillo has a population of 910,738, placing it in the top 100 of the top 100 U.S. cities. At first glance, Amarillo appears to be more of a rural area in the middle of nowhere. With an average annual temperature of 41 degrees Fahrenheit, Amarillo lies in the midst of the Texas panhandle, which has a climate similar to the U.S. Southeast. But Amarillo isn't simply one of the world's largest city parks, as the city has a surprisingly lively arts scene. The annual Arts on the Square, a four-day celebration of music, art and theatre, takes place in May. The celebration is free and is a good opportunity to see what Amarillo has to offer and enjoy some of the city's parks. On a farm near the city, Lubbock has been producing wine for more than 90 years. Since the 1940s, the facility has made award-winning Zinfandel wine and Sangria wine. The wine is sold throughout the United States and in some locations abroad. The famous produce is grown by the master farmers who grow various types of grapes. During harvest, more than 200 volunteers work from sunup to sund
