The company says its vehicle electronics "were susceptible to damage from extreme temperatures" that could cause the airbag warning light to flash. Dealers will inspect the airbag and send affected vehicles to the company's center for further evaluation and a fix. The company says it has been notified of just one injury related to this problem. FCA didn't say when it plans to notify owners and dealers about the recall, but we expect to hear something in the next few days. The company says there have been about 3,200 reports of vehicles with this problem to date.Dynamics of background electrolyte in biological tissues: role of water and ion content. Eukaryotic cells function in a complex environment with a variety of different physiological processes taking place simultaneously. Here, we study the dynamics of the distribution of background electrolyte (BGE) concentration in an aqueous medium representing the cytoplasm of a single cell. The BGE is modelled as a mixture of a dilute aqueous electrolyte (consisting of ionic species, none of which is concentrated in the cell) and a concentrated aqueous electrolyte in equilibrium with the cell. We characterize the BGE dynamics with a model consisting of the following nonlinear coupled equations describing the mass balance of dilute and concentrated electrolytes in the medium: (i) mass balance of the dilute electrolyte (c); (ii) mass balance of the concentrated electrolyte (C); (iii) electrostatic (Coulombic) interaction between the dilute and concentrated electrolytes (c); and (iv) mass transfer (diffusion) of the concentrated electrolyte in and out of the cell. A statistical model which is defined by a quasistationary solution is used to obtain asymptotic analytical solutions for the BGE, ions, and the cations and anions inside the cell. It is shown that the dynamics of the BGE depends on the ionic content of the cell, its concentration
