In the early hours of Tuesday morning, a huge fireball lit up the sky near Highway 174 and Highway 6 in rural California. The fireball lit up the sky in Calaveras County and sent hundreds of residents in the area to the roof of their homes to see what was going on. It was so bright that two pilots reported it to air traffic control and a F-16 fighter jet was scrambled to take a look. The most likely explanation for the fireball was the explosion of an oil tank, according to Johnathan Scruggs, meteorologist for the National Weather Service. A spokesperson for the California Highway Patrol told the Los Angeles Times that the fireball was reported at about 2 a.m. PT and the fireball was seen up to 10 miles away. "It was absolutely amazing," Michael Bracelin, a truck driver, told CBS News. "I didn't know what to do." The fireball was about the size of a 20-person's shoe, Bracelin said. "A lot of lights out there, and it was really bright. Just a huge, huge fireball," he said. National Weather Service photos of the fireball. Several residents in the area told the Los Angeles Times they saw a streak of light as the fireball came over the hills. Witnesses told the Los Angeles Times that the fireball was so bright that it was visible for about 15 minutes. Screenshots taken by NASA imagery specialist Anthony Rizzuto show the fireball lighting up the dark sky. NASA's satellite imagery shows the location where the fireball was seen. The fireball was captured on NASA's satellite imagery. The US Coast Guard has not received any reports of missing people, but a marine helicopter has been sent to the area. One such system that is of particular interest for use as an anti-missile defense weapon is the long-pulse (LP) laser system. Such a laser system would operate with a pulse period ranging from tens of nanoseconds to hundreds of microseconds. Such a laser system would have a peak power

As you can see there's nothing much around in these particular areas so I'm going to head across the highway, but you may have noticed that there are now a lot of security cars around, and these are likely to be manned by bodyguards so it's best to avoid them. Anyway, you can always sneak past them if you're really quick, but that is going to be very difficult. At this point the place is crawling with guards so you need to be very careful about that. I have already gone to the other side of the road so I am going to get down to the abandoned highway but just as I'm getting down to it there's a bodyguard coming over so I will have to abort my plan for the moment. Anyway, head down to the place and park up next to the fence. Get up and take a look at the electric fence in front of you. You need to get behind it for now so if you press R3 in the console it will open up the lockers. Go and find the lockers and then take a look at the circuit board and press R1. You will then be able to see the security cameras on the wall. If you look at the little switch it is next to the cameras you can then get in through there. If you get in now you are going to have to head to the high-rise building in the middle of the fence. Once you are in you will be able to see all the guards heading up the stairs. To get into the building is rather easy; just jump up to the roof and then you should be able to find the door. I am actually going to go into the building and have a look around so let's get moving. Now it is time for us to check the hostages inside. At the top of the stairs 2d92ce491b
