IObit Uninstaller License Code Download Category:Windows-only software of the regulatory scheme. Because the *674 forfeiture provisions of the California DPA specifically apply to "escrow accounts and to property of any kind subject to a forfeiture or other transfer restriction," and because section 6651(2) applies only to property "claimed by all other persons," the Department's construction of the California scheme is reasonable. The court notes that there is no direct answer to the question whether California law in fact would apply a constructive trust to such property. However, because the Department's interpretation of California law is eminently reasonable and because California would apply its law in the same manner in the case of a lienholder interest, the court agrees with the Department that section 6651(2) would apply a constructive trust to the interest it created. B. Whether the California Unlawful Detainer Statute is Substantially Similar to the New York Statute Pursuant to 29 C.F.R. § 870.16(d), the court must also determine whether the California Unlawful Detainer Statute "is substantially similar to the New York Statute." Section 870.16(d) states that the court may not "look behind" a warrant of eviction and determine whether the plaintiff's underlying actions are valid. Despite the language of section 870.16(d), courts generally hold that the focus of the analysis is upon the "reasonableness" of the plaintiff's actions. See, e.g., 11 McQUILLIN, supra, § 29:128 at 628-30 ("[I]t is a reasonable construction of the term 'substantially similar' to include only a reasonable degree of similarity."); see also C.H. v. Illinois, 98 F.2d 83, 85 (2d Cir.1938) ("[I]n determining whether a statute is substantially similar to a statute of another state, the court may not inquire whether the foreign statute is wise, or whether it was well advised, or whether the reasonableness of the legislation might be questioned, or whether the statute bears a reasonable or rational relation to the purposes for which it was enacted. Such an inquiry is not made in the courts of other states with reference to the interpretation and enforcement of its domestic statutes."). Courts in this district have also noted that the "'proximity and relatedness' test is simply another formulation of the standard set ba244e880a
