Tendulkar has been credited with several innovations in cricket. One of them is the change of the game's scoring from a base of six to the currently accepted base of four. Prior to the change, no batsman could score more than two runs in one over. Many times Tendulkar would chase a boundary, end up hitting the ball out of the ground, and then miss the next ball in the same over and the run would be lost. Tendulkar's rapid scoring, a record that still stands today, inspired the change. He still plays the role of a talismanic figure in cricket, even though he is no longer the face of the game. He is often considered the greatest batsman in cricket history. Tendulkar was born in Baroda, India, on August 16, 1949. He began his cricketing career as a batsman at the age of 11. In December 1969, he made his debut for Bombay. By the end of the 1970s, Tendulkar became the second-youngest cricketer to score a hundred on his debut. His career began to take off as
