References Category:Content management systems Category:Website managementThe present disclosure relates to an electronic device, a control method thereof, and a storage medium. In recent years, a user may, using a smartphone, communicate with a friend via short message service (SMS) while the user is in an environment where wireless signals are unlikely to reach, such as outdoors. If the user, while at work, checks the phone and receives a message from a friend, the user has to leave work to respond to the message. This is inconvenient. Therefore, methods of automatically receiving a message from a friend while a user is at work have been proposed. For example, JP 2011-209933A discloses that, if a device corresponding to a specific operation is in operation, a message from a friend is read and, if a response is not received within a specified period of time, the device automatically replies to the friend's message.Q: SQLite3 query involving JOINs and not working as I'd expect it to? I am working with an SQLite 3 database that contains the information I need for a Java program I am writing. This program has a method that should return the results of a query that will take into account that a row in the table has more than one entry in the other table. This is the query I am using: SELECT * FROM loginformation lf LEFT JOIN loginrequest lr ON lf.filedid=lr.filedid WHERE lf.userid=? GROUP BY lf.id Now, I know this doesn't work. It returns one row per loginformation, no matter how many loginrequest there are. What I would like it to do is return one row per loginformation where there is only one loginrequest. However, I can't think of the right way to write this query. I've tried all sorts of variations, including using MAX(lr.start
