Worth checking out: A: Audible for Android, formerly AudibleDesktop, is fully open source and you can find it here A: Here is the link to the audible website Q: How to run AVD inside Google Cloud Shell? I have installed Google Cloud SDK for Eclipse. It works but I want to use the Android Virtual Device (AVD) to test my app. I can't figure out how to run my app on a virtual device inside the Cloud Shell. The commands I have tried so far are: 1) Configure the default user account for the Cloud Shell: user@shell:~ $ gcloud config set account default --project my-project-id 2) Configure the default project: user@shell:~ $ gcloud config set project my-project-id 3) Create the default project: user@shell:~ $ gcloud alpha projects create-project --regions=us-west1 my-project-id 4) Start the project: user@shell:~ $ gcloud alpha start-project my-project-id 5) List the project instances: user@shell:~ $ gcloud alpha list-instances my-project-id my-project-id/0: unknown 6) Run the app in the project's default instance: user@shell:~ $ gcloud alpha run-instance --image-url=image-url my-project-id/0 --project my-project-id user@shell:~ $ gcloud alpha run-instance --image-url=image-url my-project-id/0 --project my-project-id Error: No Cloud SDK version can be found for the environment (linux-x86_64). If you are using Cloud SDK version 30.0.0 or later, please see for details on how to download the correct version of Cloud SDK. 7) Create an AVD in the project's default instance: user@shell:~ $ gcloud alpha virtual-device create-avd --image-url=image-url --

To that end, we have made some more fixes and improvements that you can read in the release notes. The head of Germany's most high-profile soccer club, Borussia Dortmund, has revealed how he raised tens of millions of euros to keep his top players. Dortmund football club is a family business, manager Jurgen Klopp explained. He said: "We have a major project going on, working on our stadium, the training ground and youth academy." He has kept the team running during a brief financial crisis caused by a series of match-fixing scandals that led to criminal charges being laid against several players. Klopp has negotiated player salaries of around €50m a year and even helped raise cash for a profit-sharing scheme, as well as a €35m takeover of the club's training ground. As he spoke, Klopp smiled and played with a plastic ball on the table in front of him. Image copyright PA Image caption Jurgen Klopp said it is 'a major project' for Dortmund to complete its new stadium "I used to work for a high-street bank. When I started, I was the youngest guy in the branch. They were all older than me. "I worked here for 11 years and then became a football manager. The only thing I got a kick out of was when my boss retired. "So I'm a boss and a kid at the same time. This is so weird for me, a little kid with a big project." Asked if it is scary to have so much responsibility at a club that is about to complete its new stadium, Klopp replied: "No, you get scared when it's over. "I've been through this before. After five years, when you are inside the bubble, you can't imagine the outside world. "I was working for Dortmund, doing what I wanted, in the sunshine, surrounded by happy people. Now I get a bit scared. "You know, this is my third year, and I was a nobody when I was manager at Mainz. "We've now been at the European Cup final, been in the Champions League and in
