

Learn About : How Do Bio-Detection Dogs Differ from Regular Service Dogs

Bio-detection dogs and regular service dogs, like the ones trained at Commando Kennels, have different roles and training.

Bio-detection dogs are like the Sherlock Holmes of the dog world. They're trained to pick up on very specific scents linked to medical conditions, explosives, drugs, and more. They have an incredible sense of smell and can detect these scents even in tiny amounts. They work in healthcare, security, and search and rescue.

In contrast, regular service dogs are more like the everyday heroes. They're trained to assist people with disabilities – Think of canines that assist in mobility or emotional support, or guide dogs for the blind.

So, the big difference is in what they're trained for. Bio-detection dogs are all about smelling trouble (or help), while regular service dogs are more like supportive companions for people with different needs.
